

INDUCTION PROGRAM

(2024-2025)

Moving to college is the most anticipated stage of a student's life after high school. One everyone would agree that one important similarity between college and school life is that attending college allows pupils to feel more independent. Students in school adhere to the rules of parents and instructors, but a college student prefers to be in control of their own life. However, freedom also entails responsibility. Aside from academics, this is the one life lesson that universities try to impart in their pupils. The college administration indirectly teaches students to take responsibility for their lives through a variety of training programs. Nonetheless, the induction program is the first move a college takes in this direction. Yes, the day that the majority of students find incomprehensible. On 12th august 2024 college organized the orientation program. Ms. Navita Thakur (assistant professor) lead the Orientation program. Ms.Suman, Ms. Priya & Ms. Harneet Kaur Present in the session.

1. Life Lessons for the Future: Experts who can teach life lessons typically present at induction sessions. Hearing from a lifelong learner can provide students with excitement and vigor to embark on this new journey.
2. Add-On Information: Although listed in the brochure, colleges provide a wide range of extra courses that most students choose not to enroll in. The faculty presents several optional programs that students might enroll in at an orientation session. Public speaking and English language certification courses are also possible options for these courses
3. Department Familiarization: You will spend two to four years of your academic career as a student in a certain department. Getting to know department heads ahead of time can be crucial.
4. Meet Your Mates: It might be a wonderful experience to go into a college class alongside buddies on the first day. You can get to know and connect with every member of your cohort and form friendships through an induction program.

SUMMARY

In order to graduate, a student must possess moral beliefs, the requisite information, and the necessary civic and professional competencies. The majority of students who lose interest in their subject of study—Management, for example—also stop wanting to learn. The induction program's goals are to acclimatize recently enrolled students, motivate them to pursue extracurricular and academic interests, reduce competition and inspire them to pursue excellence, build relationships between teachers and students, give them a broader outlook on life, and help them develop their character.
